HONOUR AMONG NATIONS (Pall Mall Gazette) The immediate adoption of the Gortschakoff precedent by Count Bismarck may well create loubte of the soundness of Mr. Mill's speculations on the obligatory force of treaties. The Luxemburg Convention has not a single one of the inherent vices which Mr. Mill condemued in the class of engagements to which the Treaty of Paris belonged. It inflicted no dishonour on Luxemburg, but on the other hand, is dearly prized by the inbabitants. It would not have been one whit the more binding if it had been terminable The arrangements which it establishes bear a very strong resemblance to the policy which Mr. Mill almost imputed it as a crime to the English Government that it had omitted to adopt—the policy of telling France and Germany that the first of them which went to war should have England for an enemy. The causes of its violation are patent to all the world. It is known that Luxemburg cannot fight, and it is believed that England will not fight. And no doubt'the temptation to sacrifice good faith to an immediate advantage has been all the greater because the English statesman who negotiated the Convertion, declared shortly afterwards that no one of the contracting parties was bound to vindicace the neutrality guaranteed to Luxemburg unless all the contracting parties joined in vindicating it. It is reasonable to suppose that there is som flaw in the basis of Mr. Mill's speculations, and in point of fact we think he has been misled by a felee analogy. Nobody knows better than he that International Law is not really luw, and why it is not law; but he seems to have jumped to the conclusion that it is, therefore, the same thing as morality. It is very wrong, he wrote, to break a promise, but it does not follow that are sorry to say that there is too much reason. for thinking that, unless the breaking of pri mises is to become habitual, blood must be shed. There cannot, in truth, be any closer analogy than that which we drew the other day between the law of nations and law of bonour, and between public war and private duelling would be a great mistake, we repeat, to take for granted that there was anything essentially immoral in the Code of Honour. To a very great extent it coincided with morality, and it even went beyond it. Thou shalt not lie; thou shalt not cheat; thou shalt keep thy promises; thou shult not seduce women; thou shalt abstain body else was out of danger Within a very of International Law, and the original idea at short space of time after the last boat had been the basis both of public war and of private despatched, perhaps about one quarter of an duelling was precisely the same-that God hour, the ship fell over on her port broadside. gard of the obligations of public faith.

The Speech contained the following allusion to affairs in China :—!! The massacres of French and Russian residouts at Tientsin, under circomstances of great barbarity, were supposed by some to have been premeditated, and to inlicate a purpose among the populace to exterminute foreigners in the Chinese Empire. The evidence fails to establish such a supposition. but shows a complicity between the lucal authorities and the mob. The Government at Peking, however, seems to have been disposed to fulfil its Trenty obligations so, far as it was able to do so. Unfortunately, the news of the war between the German States and France reached China soon after the massacre. It would appear that the popular mind became possessed with the idea of this contest extending to Chinese waters, would neutral so the Christian influence and power, and that the time was coming when the supersititious masses might expel all foreigners and restore mandarian influence. Anticipating trouble from this cause, I invited France and North Germany to make an authorised suspension of hostilities in the East (where they were temporarily suspended by act of the commanders), and to act together for the future protection in China of the lives and properties f Americans and Europeans.' > CAVALRY AND INFANTRY (Pall Mall Gazette.)

We are not aware of any instance yet fully authenticated in this war of cavalry charging home on infantry thoroughly prepared to receive them in close order, unless it be that rash attack in which MacMahon's two regiments of enirassiers were practically annihilated at Woerth. A good deal was said the other day about a charge made by the 9th Prussian Hussars on some infantry in the buttle before Amiens; but the details since given in letters from those engaged show beyond all dispute that the infantry so ridden down were simply a mass of skirmishers at open order. They belonged to two battalions of chasecurs (17th and 12th), and no doubt formed part of one of the new regiments de marche. The cavalry got up s slope which had hidden-them, and suddenly came close on these skirmishers, who at once began filing at them, and seem to have been thrown out without supports, for no other infantry are mentioned as being within view. The two neurest agandrous of the 9th at once had the order from their colonel. Wittich, to charge, and rude instantly at the line of fire, the enemy await. ing them without an attempt to run or close in any general mass. A good many of the bussars were shut down and a few bayoneted; but after each had fired a single shot the scattered Frenchmon had no chance, and were nearly at cut down on the spot before quarter was granted, for the fight was so sharp for a few seconds that the adjutant was wounded and an aide-decamp bayoneted at the side of Colonel Wittich. who himself took a personal part in the melée. From the accounts we follow, which are exclusively German, it is very evident that the unfortunate chasseurs behaved with great courage. and also that they were utterly untrained to rally as modern skirmishers abould, consequently affording the hostile cavalry such a chance as horsemen cannot expect to meet with if opposed to thoroughly taught infantry.
